The locomotives were built by Baldwin A-Co., of Philadelphia. They were Moguls, and weighed 42 tons each. They tinned the curves easily, and usually took over a baggage car, an eight-wheeled American passenger car, and four or five large four-wheeled freight cars. They were limited to a slow rate of running, about five to six miles an hour; though they could have run somewhat faster, had it been desirable; but absolute safety was deemed an essential element in the management of a great and novel work among a people who were yet unaccustomed to railroads; many of whom persisted in declaring that they would never ride under the Sierra through the Big...
