Excerpt: . . . do you know my nom tie plume Job on the Dunghill. Youve seen the name, many times, of course. I am the very party, sir; whereupon I gave him a compendinm of my family history (excluding my father and the Irishman from the relationship), and of my resources, actual and probable. Strange to relate, Williams became perfectly happy on hearing of my poverty! In order to convince him I was telling the truth, I narrated the story of the hamper which he had helped me to carry into the house. In further confirmation, did not he and I fetch the hamper into the parlour, and overhaul its contents And did we not, that night, get additional proof of what was in it, and so on, day by day, until we saw the bottom And, lest I should forget to mention it again, let me here say, that the twain whose hearts were gladdened by the good things of that hamper, never, during their stay in college, saw the day that they had not a meal they could go to. They both, I shall believe, placed their trust in the loving cars of the Master, and were not disappointed. CHAPTER XXXVH. THOMAS BARTLEY VISITS BALA. Before starting from home I had, foolishly enough, I am aware, formed a most extraordinary notion of college life, and one which I hardly know how to describe. Cognisant of the fact that the students were almost without exception preachers, I...
