Excerpt: . . . accuse ones self. To be let blood, when one is in health, is a signal for a sickness to come. An anticipated excuse awakens a discontent that slept. A Prudent Man ought not to seem sensible of anothers suspicion, because that is to court his resentment. He ought oftely endeavour to cure that suspicion by a sincere and civil deportment. J. . . MAXIME CCXLVII. to knovo d little htore, and to live a little-less. ; y Others on the contrary fay, that ho nest leisure is better than much business. . Nothing is ours, but time, which even they, who haVe no fixt habitation enjoy. It is an equal misfortune to employ the pretious time of life in mechanical exercises, or in the hurry of great affairs. One is not to load himself neither with business, nor envy. Thats to live, and yet be choakt in a Croud. Some extend this precept even to Sciences. But not to know, is not to live. See Maxime 4. . . i. . f. i, . 1; . MAXIME CCXLVUI. Not to put off to the last. i . . . , . There are men;of a last impression, ( for impertinence runs always upon extremes. ) They have a mind and a will of wax. The last applies the Seal, and effaces all the others. These men are never gained, because with the same facility they are lost. Every body gives them a tincture....
