BiblioGov. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 26 pages. Dimensions: 9.7in. x 7.4in. x 0.1in. Pursuant to a congressional request, GAO provided information on C-4 explosive, focusing on its storage, production, and distribution. GAO found that: (1) C-4 is an explosive mixture that produces a cutting action when detonated; (2) two separate facilities produced C-4 and the Army had identified another four producers to meet mobilization needs; (3) the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms restricted the purchase of C-4 to persons with a license and valid permit; (4) various Army organizations controlled the production, storage, distribution, use, and disposal of C-4; (5) the C-4 production process was not particularly dangerous, but C-4 would be difficult for individuals to produce because the explosive component was difficult to obtain; (6) since 1985, U. S. C-4 production, military requirements, and consumption have greatly fluctuated; (7) various Army bases stored C-4; (8) the Department of Defense had issued various reports concerning C-4 controls and physical security; (9) it could not determine whether the Army could account for all C-4 produced within the last 5 years; and (10) C-4 production exceeded military requirements by less than 1 percent.
