With respect to this bird, farmers make a mistake, too. Because it picks up wheat upon the surface of the field or even takes some (more or less) after it is covered, the Dove is, in some places, looked upon as an enemy. But no bird does more in devouring noxious weed-seeds than this one. An examination of many crops of this species by the Agricultural Department at Washington showed the contents of the crop of one Dove to be seven thousand mullein seeds. When it is known that a Dove fills his crop several times each day, the usefulness of this bird may be imagined. The Mourning Dove is beautiful withal, and too innocent and gentle in habit to make the killing of it, for food, a sport. PARTICULAR DESCRIPTION. --Forehead, reddish-buff; head, greenish-blue; rest of upper parts, as in...
